An Evening of Jewish Music

Featuring Jonathan Yudkin, Rabbi Saul and Rabbi Rami Strosberg, & Friends

A family evening celebrating the Rededication of our Sanctuary
In appreciation of all those who helped turn a dream into a reality

Saturday Evening, February 19 @ 7:30 PM

Free (Thanks in part to the Nashville Jewish Federation)

A message from the desk of Rabbi Saul:

An excerpt from our Israel Trip 2011

Shabbat, January 8, JERUSALEM - It was the second Shabbos of our Israel trip. Kelly, Karen, Daniella and I broke off from the larger group to go to Shul. We chose a synagogue in our neighborhood (Romema) called Sherith Israel...Daniella had discovered it earlier while out buying milk for Cole.

I'm telling you about this Shul because of its differences and similarities to our Shul. Our Shul is Hungarian in origin and follows the Ashkenazic tradition. The Sherith Israel in Romema is Sephardic. Unlike our sanctuary, which is quite large, this Shul was tiny – probably the size of our chapel. The pews were set up in a “U” shape, around the Bimah, and the women’s section was essentially a small room attached to the sanctuary, accessible only through a window opening. There were about 25 men and 5 women.

The service followed the Sephardic ‘nusach’ (prayer mode) and different congregants led the service. Unlike our Shul, the honors were all auctioned off at the beginning. The prices were low and I regret not making a bid, as it would have been a nice way to give something back to the Shul that welcomed us. Other customs unique to this Shul (and others in Israel): The Cohanim duchaned as they do every day in Israel. The men passed out snuff following the Torah reading.

The Haftorah was read from a scroll. And Shul began at 8 AM instead of 9 AM. Now, on to the similarities. The Shul was very welcoming. I had Amalia in my arms, and despite her whimpers, the men smiled and assured me it was okay. When Cole came in later, he was welcomed with some candy. The people in the Shul appeared diverse. One man was wearing jeans, a few others in black-hats and suits. Some men were davening nicely. A few were talking. But the common denominator was that they all came together for Shul because that is what Jews ‘who get it’ do on Shabbat. We left feeling great at having spent time in another Sherith Israel, so different on the surface, yet so much the same, deep down.

FOOD, FAITH AND ACCESS

by Miriam Leibowitz, Re/Storing Nashville Program Coordinator

For many Nashville residents there is no easy way to get affordable healthy food. Food desert residents often rely on friends and neighbors for a ride to the store, having to pay for gas, or food in exchange. By bus, it can take more than three hours roundtrip with multiple transfers. The closest stores are invariably more expensive and lack fresh produce. An Edgehill resident I work closely with has said, "I'd rather buy a banana than the chips, but all (the corner store) has are chips." There are no stores to purchase bananas in her neighborhood; the nearest grocery store is over three miles away with a significant walk up hills to and from the nearest bus stops. There are resident-led efforts in three of Nashville's food desert neighborhoods (Edgehill, North Nashville and East Nashville) to open full-service grocery stores and to increase direct transportation access to existing stores. These groups are working with Re/Storing Nashville to bring awareness about food inequity in our city. The Jewish community has a long history of working for those in need, but one of the key aspects of working for food justice is shifting away from an entirely charity-based model to a long-term, sustainable model, where the entire community works together to achieve the desired result. In this case, the goals are direct transportation access to existing grocery stores, and tax and zoning incentives to encourage development of full-service grocery stores in Nashville's food desert neighborhoods. Both of these goals strive to reduce the risk of diet-related disease for food desert residents, for whom affordable healthy food is inaccessible. To engage in this conversation please visit www.restoringnashville.org, and become involved in creating a better food system in our city!

Support for Re/Storing Nashville was provided by a grant from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation. Re/Storing Nashville is a program of Community Food Advocates: www.communityfoodadvocates.org.

And it was in the days of Helena.... She is Helena, who lives in Nashville, TN and goes to school as far away as Brentwood. In her twelfth year of life, she made a party to celebrate her Bas Mitzvah for all her family and friends from all the cities and states from where they hailed....

After casting lots, she decided on Purim Day 5771 corresponding to 20 March 2011 at Congregation Sherith Israel, in Nashville, TN for her Bas Mitzvah celebration at 3:00 PM. Megillah Reading at 2:00 PM.

Please join her family for this great joyous day. Purim Seuda (festive meal) immediately following the Bas Mitzvah Accommodations at Holiday Inn - Vanderbilt <http://helenasbasmitzvah.blogspot.com>

WANTED: HOSTS WANTED: GUESTS

We’re planning a Getting-to-Know-You Shabbat dinner on March 11, in the homes of various Sherith Israel members. Hosts will welcome new Shul members--or members they don't know very well--for Shabbat dinner. The purpose is for people in our Shul community to get to know each other.

So...we need hosts to host, and guests, to uh, (you guessed it) to guest. Contact Evelyn Koch at 292-6087 or kochevelyn@hotmail.com to arrange your Shabbat dinner or to answer questions about the event. Tell her if you are prepared to be either a guest or a host and we'll make the arrangements.
